Oct. 19, 2018 8:00 pm ET Order Reprints Print Article Economic Update by Regions Financial Oct. 17: On a not seasonally adjusted basis, there were 106,100 total housing starts in September, slightly below our forecast of 108,200 starts. 36,000 single family starts is the lowest monthly total since February and well below the average of 44,000 starts per month over the prior five months. That the September starts number was also well below the average of 44,000 starts per month over the prior five months. in the region in September. Though perhaps to a lesser degree, the October data will be impacted by Hurricane Michael, meaning that it will be a few more months before we have a better sense of the underlying trends in construction activity in the South. BT TV Box Pro is a cracker It's no more "Lazy Sundays" for YouTube. In October, a year after successfully negotiating a distribution agreement with NBC, the network yanked its content-more than a hundred videos, including the popular Saturday Night Live rap spoof, "Lazy Sundays"-from the Google-owned site. Now NBC has its online videos exclusively on Hulu, a new joint venture with News Corp.In other words, what NBC wants is MeTube.It's not the only broadcast company that's left YouTube to create its own sandbox over the past year: Viacom is giving exclusive content to newcomer Joost, and AOL-Time Warner is backing Veoh, Several major companies and some smaller upstarts are hoping to make YouTube as irrelevant as Facebook made Friendster-or at least carve out a solid niche in online video. They may yet have a chance too. According to the most recent numbers from comScore, Google Sites (which includes YouTube) accounted for more than 28 percent of online video views in September-far from a lock on the market. Though there's still a bit of catch-up to do: Fox Interactive Media, encompassing sites like AmericanIdol.com and FoxSports.com, came in a distant second with just over 4 percent. Here, a look at the upstarts getting into the online videogame.HULUNBC and Fox, longtime squabblers with YouTube, wanted more control over their online content. In 2007 they created Hulu, which launched in October in beta form. It is expected to officially go live by year-end.What It Carries: Full-length current shows from NBC and Fox, longtime squabblers with YouTube, wanted more control over their online content. In 2007 they created Hulu, which launched in October in beta form. Sony Pictures Television. The final version will have select movies from 20th Century Fox and popular older television series. Major Success Factor: Advertising commitments from General Motors and other major companies bode well for the site. VEOHTech entrepreneur Dmitry Shapiro started Veoh in 2004. Users download the software onto their computers and save shows a la TiVo-except they don't have to wait for the shows to air on television first. What It Carries: Full-length shows from CBS, the CW, Turner Classic Movies, and other AOL-Time Warner networks as well as movies from Lions Gates Films, and original Veoh shows. Five-minute previews let you sample the selection. Major Success Factors: The download requirement may not appeal to a generation used to click-and-play. And a new lawsuit by Universal Music for copyright infringement could be enough to take Veoh off the air.IFILMOne of the oldest YouTube competitors, iFilm was started by a private independent filmmaker in 1997. MTV Networks bought it in 2005 for $49 million. At the time, iFilm was delivering more than 30 million streams per month. What It Carries: iFilm has become the online home of MTV's Spike TV channel; shows like Manswers and Hooters Swimsuit Pageant have crowded out the more highbrow content iFilm used to carry (trailers, shorts, and movies including Theo van Gogh's Submission). Major Success Factor: iFilm has a well-defined demographic-18-to-34-year-old men-from the cable channel. JOOSTNiklas Zennstrom and Janus Friis produced file-sharing Nazaa and internet-calling software Skype, and then, in 2006, they started work on a peer-to-peer video-sharing network, inspired by those earlier projects. What It Carries: Officially licensed shows from CBS, National Geographic, and Viacom, as well as good but canceled programs from various company vaults. Plus, better-looking video than YouTube. Major Success Factors: More than one million beta testers have been using the program. A limited partnership with Fox Broadcasting-likely dependent on Fox's progress with Hulu-is rumored to be in the works. VUMEKevin Flynn created the "Peanut Butter Jelly Time" video, now a YouTube staple, but never made any money from it. Last year he launched VuMe, which pays directors based on the number of views their work gets. What It Carries: Everything from cute animal videos and karaoke hijinks to serious political commentary and short indie films. In other words, what you'd find on YouTube. Major Success Factors: It is the first video site to use this business model. Barely a year old, it's unclear if VuMe can sustain paying $3 for every 1,000 hits. EMPIVOTNonprofit veteran Thom Wallace and P.R. expert Chace Warmington decided to create an environmentally-focused video website. The beta version launched in August. As of December, the most viewed video was watched 2,500 times. What It Carries: Videos on going green and footage of the latest oil spill, all provided by users; no network affiliations. Major Success Factor: Many of emPivot's videos can be found on any major cable-news website-if not on YouTube-but never has green-related footage been all in one place. CHANNEL 101Los Angeles natives Dan Harmon and Rob Schrab started Channel 101 as a monthly festival where independent shorts would be judged by the audience. The 4-year-old website is an online extension. What It Carries: Filmmakers upload brief, self-funded videos, including some featuring popular comedians like Drew Carey and Jack Black. Based on audience reception for a piece, directors are asked to film another short. Major Success Factor: Many of the videos are made by entertainment professionals. The website is supported by its real-world counterpart. Visit Portfolio.com for the latest business news and opinion, executive profiles and careers. Portfolio.com 2007 Condé Nast Inc. The same watch, last seen at auction in 2002, could at that stage have been bought for a little over £180,000. The point? Knowing what to look for when buying a classic watch you love wearing. (Related: 3 great watches under £250) First of all, what are the major considerations when looking for a pre-owned watch? Should you buy to make money or just buy it because you love it? I don't think you should ever buy a watch solely as an investment. Watches are meant to be worn, not kept in a safe with the seals still on. I might be biased as a watch lover, but I think that mechanical watchmaking is an art form, and having a watch on your wrist that makes you proud and happy is worth far more than having one that'll make a little bit of money over the years. Can you buy a good watch is a watch that you personally value. Frederique Constant is one of my favourite brands for value for money and their Horological Smartwatch is great. They're Swiss, date back to 1988 and have an in-house movement. Tag Heuer is one of the best-known watch brands for value for money and their history means that there are so many different styles of watch to choose from. The Formula One Quartz Red Bull special edition is a good example. Then there's NOMOS, part of whose charm is their unconventional outlook compared to the giants of watch manufacturing. (Related: 5 of the best watches under £1000)Should you stick to automatic watches? Mechanical movements come in two main flavours: manually wound, and self-winding (or "automatic"). It's not always easy to know which is the right choice for you. While automatic watches may seem to have some obvious advantages, there's a good case to be made that manual watches represent a more authentic, more desirable option. What shouldn't you do if you're buying pre-owned? The biggest mistake is to try to save a bit more money by buying from unregulated marketplaces. The times when fake watches were easily recognised through badly written brand names on the dial are long gone. No one can claim to know if a watch has been made using genuine parts but isn't necessarily an original without taking the mechanism out at a watch desk. You might be well versed on what the engraved Rolex laser crown looks like on the lower edge of the sapphire glass, or the exact typography on the bezel of the Omega Speedmaster, but the devil is always in the details. This sort of thing shouldn't be a gamble - it should be an experience that you savour. (Related: 5 British watch brands you need to know) And finally, are there any extremely rare watches we should keep our eyes open for? The sort that could help you retire at 30? The short answer is 'not unless you're willing to spend a lot of money on one first.' That being said, the Rolex Submariner has doubled in price over the last decade and only five years ago, vintage watches from the Swiss margue's sister brand Tudor could be picked up for a few hundred pounds. Today, this little sister has found itself firmly in the horological spotlight. Pre-owned models are selling at above RRP and earlier this year a Tudor Submariner (Ref 7923) was sold at auction for a record (at the time) $350,000 US.My advice? Sometimes taking a risk pays off.
